Bight in P officers maintained success with the objective in Q4.  In Q4 the need for smaller incentives, in addition to our raffic system for compliance was dentified. The smaller incentives for program completion provide an immediate and individualized reward based on their milerals and deads gathere during their initial orientation. Apparently the raffic system was not immediate onough to some and they would rather have something that is promored in 1933.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | N/A e e e e e e e e e e e e e e e e e e e                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 22.5         |

X-eep if up. | NIA              | with this objective in Q4 despite growing caselladd.  All 8 youth sentenced in Q4 received program referrals in accordance with their risk assessment in the sentence of the program referrals in Q4 the need for smaller incentives in addition to our raiffe system for compliance was dentified. The smaller incentives for program completion provide an immorbate and individuality of tevant based on their interests and deas gathere during them initial orientation. Apparently the raiffer system was net immediate concept to some and they would rather have something that is promised not just a chance raiffer studyon. This reminded all and the agency as a whole that rewards are                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | N/A                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | 100.00       |

In Q4 the need to smaller incentives in addition to our raffle system for compliance was identified. The smaller incentives for program completion prouds an immodate and individualized reward based on their interests and dead and advidualized reward based on their interests and dead against the raffle system was not immediate. Apparently the raffle system was not immediate change for some and they would rather have something that is promised not just a chance raffle system was not immediate and the azency as a whole that rewards a mity a reward if is meaningful to the client and we can't use a one size fits all approach.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   | N/A  N/A  a  II                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 22.5         |

Birth into Pefficers maintained success with the objective in Q4.  In Q4 the need for smaller incentives in addition to our raffic system for compliance was dentified. The smaller incentives for program completion provide an immediate and individualized reward based on their miterals and deasy gathere during their initial or necessary on the program completed or neighbor in the raffic system was not immediate onough to some and they would rather have something that is promored not just a chance raffic situation. This reminded and the agency as a whole that rewards a only a reward if it is meaningful to the client and we can't use a one size fits all approach.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | N/A  N/A  a  II                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 22.5         |

Bight in 9 efficers maintained success with this objective in Q4.  In Q4 the need for smaller incentives in addition to our raffle system for compliance was identified. The smaller incentives for program completion provide an immediate and individualized reward based on their mileses and deasy gathere during their initial orientation. Apparently the raffle system was not immediate onough to some and they would rather have something that is promoded not just a chance raffle situation. This reminded shall another alenge, as a whole that rewards a only a reward if it is meaningful to the client and we can't use a one size fits all approach.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | N/A  Did  In the second of the | 22.5         |

All 8 youth sentenced in Q4 received program referrals in accordance with their risk assessment.  Bigth risk effects maintained success with this objective in Q4.  In Q4 the need for smaller incentives in addition to our raffic system for compliance was identified. The smaller incentives for program completion provide an immediate and individualized reward based on their mileses and deasy gathere during their initial orientation. Apparently the raffic system was not immediate onough for some and they would rather have something that is promoded not just a chance raffic situation. This reminded shall another alerge, as a whole that rewards a only a reward if it is meaningful to the client and we can't use a one size fits all approach. #### Creating the Agency Case Plan

Within the Comprehensive Plan Grant Application, each funded agency agreed to provide complete and accurate data to the Kansas Department of Corrections (KDOC) regarding their initiatives for the upcoming fiscal year. Quarterly and Year-End Outcome Reports achieve this requirement by providing updates on the progress of an agency's stated goals and action steps they've identified in their Agency Case Plan.

KDOC utilizes an article titled "Implementing Evidence-Based Practice in Community Corrections: The Principles of Effective Intervention," by the Crime and Justice Institute to identify best practices for developing an agency case plan that is rooted in increasing an agency's successful supervision of clients. The article found below details the framework for the eight evidence-based principles of effective interventions.

When completing the required case plan, agencies will need to select a minimum of three principles to focus on for their upcoming fiscal year. Agencies may choose from any of the eight principles to develop their goals from. Agencies may create additional goals that are separate from the eight principles if desired once they've met the minimum requirement of three principles.

On a quarterly basis, grant awardees are required to submit their updated agency case plan document detailing the progress, challenges, and modifications to their plan,

Quarterly reports and the year-end report are to be uploaded in the grant management software program, Amplifund. Below are the due dates for report submissions in Amplifund. Please note, an accompanying signatory approval page is only required for the year-end report.

Implementing Evidence-Based Practice in Community Corrections:

Yes

The Principles of Effective Intervention

The following framework of principles is listed in developmental order and they are all highly interdependent. For example, offender assessments must consider both risk to reoffend and criminogenic needs, in that order. Research indicates that resources are used more effectively when they are focused on higher-risk rather than lower-risk offenders, therefore considering offenders' risk to reoffend prior to addressing criminogenic needs allows agencies to target resources on higher-risk offenders (see Appendix B).

Eight Evidence-Based Principles for Effective Interventions

- L Assess Actuarial Risk/Needs.
- 2. Enhance Intrinsic Motivation.
- 3. Target Interventions.
  - a. Risk Principle: Prioritize supervision and treatment resources for higher risk offenders.
  - b. Need Principle: Target interventions to criminogenic needs.
  - c. Responsivity Principle: Be responsive to temperament, learning style, motivation, culture, and gender when assigning programs.
  - d. Dosage: Structure 40-70% of high-risk offenders' time for 3-9 months.
  - e. Treatment: Integrate treatment into the full sentence/sanction requirements.
- 4. Skill Train with Directed Practice (use Cognitive Behavioral treatment methods).
- 5. Increase Positive Reinforcement.
- Engage Ongoing Support in Natural Communities.

1) Assess Actuarial Risk/Needs.

Develop and maintain a complete system of ongoing offender risk screening / triage and needs assessments. Assessing offenders in a reliable and valid manner is a prerequisite for the effective management (i.e.: supervision and treatment) of offenders. Timely, relevant measures of offender risk and need at the individual and aggregate levels are essential for the implementation of numerous principles of best practice in corrections, (e.g., risk, need, and responsivity). Offender assessments are most reliable and valid when staff are formally trained to administer tools. Screening and assessment tools that focus on dynamic and static risk factors, profile criminogenic needs, and have been validated on similar populations are preferred. They should also be supported by sufficiently detailed and accurately written procedures.

Ouestions to Ask:

- Does the assessment tool we're using measure for criminogenic risk and need?
- How are officers trained to conduct the assessment interview?
- What quality assurance is in place to ensure that assessments are conducted appropriately?
- How is the assessment information captured and used in the development of case plans?

Offender assessment is as much an ongoing function as it is a formal event. Case information that is gathered informally through routine interactions and observations with offenders is just as important as formal assessment guided by instruments. Formal and informal offender assessments should reinforce one another. They should combine to enhance formal reassessments, case decisions, and working relations between practitioners and offenders throughout the jurisdiction of supervision.

Eight Principles for Evidence-Based Practice (EBP) in Community Corrections (con't.)

2) Enhance Intrinsic Motivation.

Staff should relate to offenders in interpersonally sensitive and constructive ways to enhance intrinsic motivation in offenders. Behavioral change is an inside job; for lasting change to occur, a level of intrinsic motivation is needed. Motivation to change is dynamic and the probability that change may occur is strongly influenced by interpersonal interactions, such as those with probation officers, treatment providers, and institution staff. Feelings of ambivalence that usually accompany change can be explored through motivational interviewing, a style and method of communication used to help people overcome their ambivalence regarding behavior changes.

Research strongly suggests that motivational interviewing techniques, rather than persuasion tactics, effectively enhance motivation for initiating and maintaining behavior changes.

Questions to Ask:

- Are officers and program staff trained in motivational interviewing techniques?
- What quality assurance is in place?
- Are staff held accountable for using motivational interviewing techniques in their day-to-day interactions with offenders?

(Miller & Rollnick, 2002; Miller & Mount, 2001; Harper & Hardy, 2000; Ginsburg, et al, 2002; Ryan & Deci, 2000)

3) Target Interventions.

- A. RISK PRINCIPLE: Prioritize supervision and treatment resources for higher risk offenders.
- B. NEED PRINCIPLE: Target interventions to criminogenic needs.
- C. RESPONSIVITY PRINCIPLE: Be responsive to temperament, learning style, motivation, gender, and culture when assigning to programs.
- D. DOSAGE: Structure 40-70% of high-risk offenders' time for 3-9 months.
- E. TREATMENT PRINCIPLE: Integrate treatment into the full sentence/sanction requirements.

a) Risk Principle

Prioritize primary supervision and treatment resources for offenders who are at higher risk to re-offend. Research indicates that supervision and treatment resources that are focused on lower-risk offenders tend to produce little if any net positive effect on recidivism rates. Shifting these resources to higher risk offenders promotes harm-reduction and public safety because these offenders have greater need for pro-social skills and thinking, and are more likely to be frequent offenders. Reducing the recidivism rates of these higher risk offenders reaps a much larger bang-for-the-

Successfully addressing this population requires smaller caseloads, the application of well developed case plans, and placement of offenders into sufficiently intense cognitive-behavioral interventions that target their specific criminogenic needs.

b) Criminogenic Need Principle

Address offenders' greatest criminogenic needs. Offenders have a variety of needs, some of which are directly linked to criminal behavior. These criminogenic needs are dynamic risk factors that, when addressed or changed, affect the offender's risk for recidivism. Examples of criminogenic needs are: criminal personality; antisocial attitudes, values, and beliefs; low self control; criminal peers; substance abuse; and dysfunctional family. Based on an assessment of the offender, these criminogenic needs can be prioritized so that services are focused on the greatest criminogenic needs.

c) Responsivity Principle

Responsivity requires that we consider individual characteristics when matching offenders to services. These characteristics include, but are not limited to: culture, gender, motivational stages, developmental stages, and learning styles. These factors influence an offender's responsiveness to different types of treatment.

The principle of responsivity also requires that offenders be provided with treatment that is proven effective with the offender population. Certain treatment strategies, such as cognitive-behavioral methodologies, have consistently produced reductions in recidivism with offenders under rigorous research conditions.

Providing appropriate responsivity to offenders involves selecting services in accordance with these factors, including:

a) Matching treatment type to offender; and

b) Matching style and methods of communication with offender's stage of change readiness.

(Guerra, 1995; Miller & Rollnick, 1991; Gordon, 1970; Williams, et al, 1995)

d) Dosage

Providing appropriate doses of services, pro-social structure, and supervision is a strategic application of resources. Higher risk offenders require significantly more initial structure and services than lower risk offenders. During the initial three to nine months post-release, 40%-70% of their free time should be clearly occupied with delineated routine and appropriate services, (e.g., outpatient treatment, employment assistance, education, etc.) Certain offender subpopulations (e.g., severely mentally ill, chronic dual diagnosed, etc.) commonly require strategic, extensive, and extended services. However, too often individuals within these subpopulations are neither explicitly identified nor provided a coordinated package of supervision/services. The evidence indicates that incomplete or uncoordinated approaches can have negative effects, often wasting resources.

possible.

Treatment, particularly cognitive-behavioral types, should be applied as an integral part of the sentence/sanction process.

applied as an integral part of the sentence/sanction process.

Integrate treatment into sentence/sanction requirements through assertive case management (taking a proactive and strategic approach to supervision and case planning). Delivering targeted and timely treatment interventions will provide the greatest long-term benefit to the community, the victim, and the offender. This does not necessarily apply to lower risk offenders, who should be diverted from the criminal justice and corrections systems whenever

Questions to Ask:

- How do we manage offenders assessed as low risk to reoffend?
- Does our assessment tool assess for criminogenic need?
- How are criminogenic risk and need information incorporated into offender case plans?
- How are offenders matched to treatment resources?
- How structured are our caseplans for offenders, especially during the three to nine month period in the community after leaving an institution?
- How are staff held accountable for using assessment information to develop a case plan and then subsequently using that caseplan to manage an offender?

Community Corrections (con't.)

Skill Train with Directed Practice (using cognitive-behavioral treatment methods).

Provide evidence-based programming that emphasizes cognitivebehavioral strategies and is delivered by well trained staff. To successfully deliver this treatment to offenders, staff must understand antisocial thinking, social learning, and appropriate communication techniques. Skills are not just taught to the offender, but are practiced or role-played and the resulting pro-social attitudes and behaviors are positively reinforced by staff. Correctional agencies should prioritize, plan, and budget to predominantly implement programs that have been scientifically proven to reduce recidivism.

Questions to Ask:

- How are social learning techniques incorporated into the programs we deliver?
- How do we ensure that our contracted service providers are delivering services in alignment with social learning theory?
- Are the programs we deliver and contract for based on scientific evidence of recidivism reduction?

Questions to Ask: Do we model positive reinforcement techniques

Do our staff understand and use the four-to-one theory in their interactions with offenders?

in our day-to-day interactions with our

co-workers?

Increase Positive Reinforcement.

When learning new skills and making behavioral changes, human beings appear to respond better and maintain learned behaviors for longer periods of time, when approached with carrots rather than sticks. Behaviorists recommend applying a much higher ratio of positive reinforcements to negative reinforcements in order to better achieve sustained behavioral change. Research indicates that a ratio of four positive to every one negative reinforcement is optimal for promoting behavior changes. These rewards do not have to be applied consistently to be effective (as negative reinforcement does) but can be applied randomly.

Increasing positive reinforcement should not be done at the expense of or undermine administering swift, certain, and real responses for negative and unacceptable behavior. Offenders having problems with responsible self-regulation generally respond positively to reasonable and reliable additional structure and boundaries. Offenders may initially overreact to new demands for accountability, seek to evade detection or consequences, and fail to recognize any personal responsibility. However, with exposure to clear rules that are consistently (and swiftly) enforced with appropriate graduated consequences, offenders and people in general, will tend to comply in the direction of the most rewards and least punishments. This type of extrinsic motivation can often be useful for beginning the process of behavior change.

Engage On-going Support in Natural Communities.

Realign and actively engage pro-social supports for offenders in their communities. Research indicates that many successful interventions with extreme populations (e.g., inner city substance abusers, homeless, dual diagnosed) actively recruit and use family members, spouses, and supportive others in the offender's immediate environment to positively reinforce desired new behaviors. This Community Reinforcement Approach (CRA) has been found effective for a variety of behaviors (e.g., unemployment, alcoholism, substance abuse, and marital conflicts). In addition, relatively recent research now indicates the efficacy of twelve step programs, religious activities, and restorative justice initiatives that are geared towards improving bonds and ties to pro-social community members.

Questions to Ask:

- Do we engage community supports for offenders as a regular part of case planning?
- How do we measure our community network contacts as they relate to an offender?

(Azrin, & Besalel, 1980; Emrick et al, 1993; Higgins & Silverman, 1999; Meyers & Smith, 1997; Wallace, 1989; Project MATCH Research Group, 1997; Bonta et al, 2002; O'Connor & Perryclear, 2003; Ricks, 1974; Clear & Sumter; 2003; Meyers et al, 2002)

Eight Principles for Evidence-Based Practice (EBP) in Community Corrections (con't.)

Measure Relevant Processes/Practices.

Accurate and detailed documentation of case information, along with a formal and valid mechanism for measuring outcomes, is the foundation of evidence-based practice. Agencies must routinely assess offender change in cognitive and skill development, and evaluate offender recidivism, if services are to remain effective.

In addition to routinely measuring and documenting offender change,

Questions to Ask:

- What data do we collect regarding offender assessment and case management?
- How do we measure incremental offender change while they are staff performance should also be regularly assessed. Staff that are periodically evaluated for performance achieve greater fidelity to program design, service delivery principles, and outcomes. Staff whose performance is not consistently monitored, measured, and subsequently reinforced work less cohesively, more frequently at cross-purposes and provide less support to the agency mission.

under supervision?

- What are our outcome measures and how do we track them?
- How do we measure staff performance? What data do we use? How is that data collected?

8) Provide Measurement Feedback.

Once a method for measuring relevant processes / practices is in place (principle seven), the information must be used to monitor process and change. Providing feedback to offenders regarding their progress builds accountability and is associated with enhanced motivation for change, lower treatment attrition, and improved outcomes (e.g., reduced drink/drug days; treatment engagement; goal achievement).

The same is true within an organization. Monitoring delivery of services and fidelity to procedures helps build accountability and maintain integrity to the agency's mission. Regular performance audits and case reviews with an eye toward improved outcomes, keep staff focused on the ultimate goal of reduced recidivism through the use of evidence-based principles.

Questions to Ask:

- How is information regarding offender change and outcomes shared with officers?
   With offenders?
- With whom do we share information regarding outcome measures?
- How is staff performance data used in the performance evaluation process?

Eight Principles for Evidence-Based Practice (EBP) in Community Corrections (con't.)

Conclusion

Aligning these evidence-based principles with the core components of an agency is a consummate challenge and will largely determine the impact the agency has on sustained reductions in recidivism. In order to accomplish this shift to an outcome orientation, practitioners must be prepared to dedicate themselves to a mission that focuses on achieving sustained reductions in recidivism. The scientific principles presented in this document are unlikely to produce a mandate for redirecting and rebuilding an agency's mission by themselves. Leadership in organizational change and collaboration for systemic change are also necessary.

The framework of principles and the developmental model they comprise can and should be operationalized at three critical levels: 1) the individual case; 2) the agency; and 3) the system. At each of these levels thorough, comprehensive, and strategic planning will be necessary in order to succeed. Identifying, prioritizing, and formulating well-timed plans for addressing such particular issues are tasks requiring system collaboration and a focus on organizational development.

A final caveat here is a caution about implementation; the devil's in the details. Though the track record for program implementation in corrections may not be especially stellar, there is helpful literature regarding implementation principles. Prior to embarking on any implementation or strategic planning project, a succinct review of this literature is recommended (Mihalic & Irwin, 2003; Ellickson et al, 1983; Durlak, 1998; Gendreau et al, 1999; Gottfredson et al, 2000; Henggeler et al, 1997; Harris & Smith, 1996).

Submitting Quarterly Outcome Report in Amplifund

1. Once logged in to Amplifund, on the left side of the screen select Grant Management.

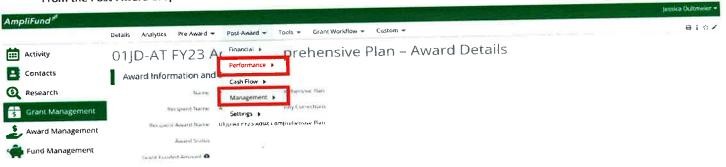

2. From the drop down menu select Grants Awarded.

3. Select the grant you wish to submit the quarterly outcome report for.

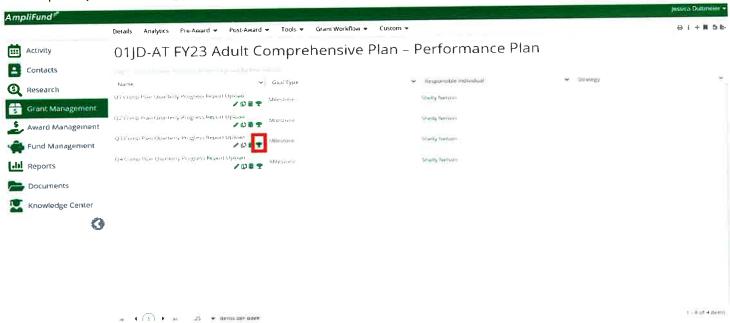

4. From the Post-Award drop down menu, select Performance → Performance Plan (right click on Performance Plan to open in a new tab). From the Post-Award drop down menu, select Management → Reporting Period (right click on Reporting Period to open in a new tab).

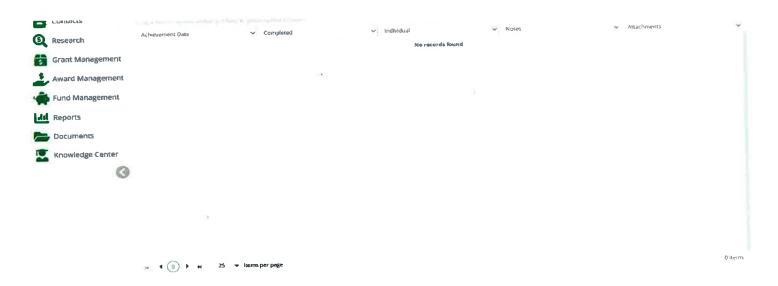

5. Open the new tab showing Performance Plan. Here is where you will complete step 1, Achievements. Select the trophy icon in the quarter you are submitting your Quarterly Outcome Report for.

6. In the upper right corner, select the + sign to create an Achievement.

 A Create Achievement box will appear where you will enter an Achievement Date, mark the Complete box, and Upload the Quarterly Outcome Report (Excel document). Select Create.

IMPORTANT: The Achievement Date MUST be a date within the reporting period, otherwise the achievement will not link to the appropriate reporting period and the submission will be rejected by KDOC. To avoid this, please use the below table when entering achievement dates.

| Quarter         | Achievement Date |
|-----------------|------------------|
| 1 st | 9/30/2022        |
| 2 nd | 12/30/2022       |
| 3 rd | 3/30/2023        |
| 4 th | 6/30/2023        |

Create Achievement

8. You have now completed step 1 and will need to complete step 2, Reporting Period, to finish the submitting process. Open the new tab showing Reporting Periods. Please note, previously submitted reporting periods from past quarters will appear here. Similar to step 1, you will select the + icon in the upper right corner to create the reporting period.

IMPORTANT: When creating a reporting period to submit your Quarterly Outcome Report, you should ONLY choose Achievements. Do not select Expenses as you want to keep your Quarterly Outcome Report and Fiscal report separate. After selecting Achievements, select the correct time period from the drop down menu and select Save.

Reporting Periods

Which grant would you like this closedut to apply to?

FY21 Example Award

What types of reporting periods would you like to include?

10. Once on the Achievements Reporting Periods screen, scroll down to the Achievements Closeout section to confirm the appropriate Quarterly Outcome Report is listed, and check box is selected.

11. Select Save, another box will appear, and the last step is to scroll down and select Close at the bottom of the screen.

FY25 Case Plan Feedback

Agency:

JIAS - Good goals with detailed action steps. JISP-Goal 1 Goal should include moderate as well as high risk youth. Step 1-Doesn't CS do YLS as part of disposition and come to you with YLS already? Step 4 does this step mean every 6 months for YLS reassessment? The goal principle is assess actuarial/risk needs, some of the action steps address case file audits and EPICS audits. Maybe an action step should be for the ISO II to perform QA on a YLS every 3 months for each officer. Goal 2-to increase program hours should there be a step on making sure that hours are being tracked and documented? Step 1-progress should be updated more then as needed, really should be updated at every contact with the youth as its living document. Standard was just updated to reflect this.

 #### Creating the Agency Case Plan

Within the Comprehensive Plan Grant Application, each funded agency agreed to provide complete and accurate data to the Kansas Department of Corrections (KDOC) regarding their initiatives for the upcoming fiscal year. Quarterly and Year-End Outcome Reports achieve this requirement by providing updates on the progress of an agency's stated goals and action steps they've identified in their Agency Case Plan.

KDOC utilizes an article titled "Implementing Evidence-Based Practice in Community Corrections: The Principles of Effective Intervention," by the Crime and Justice Institute to identify best practices for developing an agency case plan that is rooted in increasing an agency's successful supervision of clients. The article found below details the framework for the eight evidence-based principles of effective interventions.

When completing the required case plan, agencies will need to select a minimum of three principles to focus on for their upcoming fiscal year. Agencies may choose from any of the eight principles to develop their goals from. Agencies may create additional goals that are separate from the eight principles if desired once they've met the minimum requirement of three principles.

On a quarterly basis, grant awardees are required to submit their updated agency case plan document detailing the progress, challenges, and modifications to their plan.

Quarterly reports and the year-end report are to be uploaded in the grant management software program, Amplifund. Below are the due dates for report submissions in Amplifund. Please note, an accompanying signatory approval page is only required for the year-end report.

Implementing Evidence-Based Practice in Community Corrections:

The Principles of Effective Intervention

The following framework of principles is listed in developmental order and they are all highly interdependent. For example, offender assessments must consider both risk to reoffend and criminogenic needs, in that order. Research indicates that resources are used more effectively when they are focused on higher-risk rather than lower-risk offenders, therefore considering offenders' risk to reoffend prior to addressing criminogenic needs allows agencies to target resources on higher-risk offenders (see Appendix B).

Eight Evidence-Based Principles for Effective Interventions

- 1. Assess Actuarial Risk/Needs.
- 2. Enhance Intrinsic Motivation.
- 3. Target Interventions.
  - a. Risk Principle: Prioritize supervision and treatment resources for higher risk offenders.
  - b. Need Principle: Target interventions to criminogenic needs.
  - c. Responsivity Principle: Be responsive to temperament, learning style, motivation, culture, and gender when assigning programs.
  - d. Dosage: Structure 40-70% of high-risk offenders' time for 3-9 months.
  - e. Treatment: Integrate treatment into the full sentence/sanction requirements.
- 4. Skill Train with Directed Practice (use Cognitive Behavioral treatment methods).
- 5. Increase Positive Reinforcement.
- 6. Engage Ongoing Support in Natural Communities.

1) Assess Actuarial Risk/Needs.

Develop and maintain a complete system of ongoing offender risk screening / triage and needs assessments. Assessing offenders in a reliable and valid manner is a prerequisite for the effective management (i.e.: supervision and treatment) of offenders. Timely, relevant measures of offender risk and need at the individual and aggregate levels are essential for the implementation of numerous principles of best practice in corrections, (e.g., risk, need, and responsivity). Offender assessments are most reliable and valid when staff are formally trained to administer tools. Screening and assessment tools that focus on dynamic and static risk factors, profile criminogenic needs, and have been validated on similar populations are preferred. They should also be supported by sufficiently detailed and accurately written procedures.

Questions to Ask:

- Does the assessment tool we're using measure for criminogenic risk and need?
- How are officers trained to conduct the assessment interview?
- What quality assurance is in place to ensure that assessments are conducted appropriately?
- How is the assessment information captured and used in the development of case plans?

Offender assessment is as much an ongoing function as it is a formal event. Case information that is gathered informally through routine interactions and observations with offenders is just as important as formal assessment guided by instruments. Formal and informal offender assessments should reinforce one another. They should combine to enhance formal reassessments, case decisions, and working relations between practitioners and offenders throughout the jurisdiction of supervision.

Eight Principles for Evidence-Based Practice (EBP) in Community Corrections (con't.)

2) Enhance Intrinsic Motivation.

Staff should relate to offenders in interpersonally sensitive and constructive ways to enhance intrinsic motivation in offenders. Behavioral change is an inside job; for lasting change to occur, a level of intrinsic motivation is needed. Motivation to change is dynamic and the probability that change may occur is strongly influenced by interpersonal interactions, such as those with probation officers, treatment providers, and institution staff. Feelings of ambivalence that usually accompany change can be explored through motivational interviewing, a style and method of communication used to help people overcome their ambivalence regarding behavior changes.

Research strongly suggests that motivational interviewing techniques, rather than persuasion tactics, effectively enhance motivation for initiating and maintaining behavior changes.

Questions to Ask:

- Are officers and program staff trained in motivational interviewing techniques?
- What quality assurance is in place?
- Are staff held accountable for using motivational interviewing techniques in their day-to-day interactions with offenders?

3) Target Interventions.

- A. RISK PRINCIPLE: Prioritize supervision and treatment resources for higher risk offenders.
- B. NEED PRINCIPLE: Target interventions to criminogenic needs.
- C. RESPONSIVITY PRINCIPLE: Be responsive to temperament, learning style, motivation, gender, and culture when assigning to programs.
- D. DOSAGE: Structure 40-70% of high-risk offenders' time for 3-9 months.
- E. TREATMENT PRINCIPLE: Integrate treatment into the full sentence/sanction requirements.

a) Risk Principle

Prioritize primary supervision and treatment resources for offenders who are at higher risk to re-offend. Research indicates that supervision and treatment resources that are focused on lower-risk offenders tend to produce little if any net positive effect on recidivism rates. Shifting these resources to higher risk offenders promotes harm-reduction and public safety because these offenders have greater need for pro-social skills and thinking, and are more likely to be frequent offenders. Reducing the recidivism rates of these higher risk offenders reaps a much larger bang-for-the-buck.

Successfully addressing this population requires smaller caseloads, the application of well developed case plans, and placement of offenders into sufficiently intense cognitive-behavioral interventions that target their specific criminogenic needs.

b) Criminogenic Need Principle

Address offenders' greatest criminogenic needs. Offenders have a variety of needs, some of which are directly linked to criminal behavior. These criminogenic needs are dynamic risk factors that, when addressed or changed, affect the offender's risk for recidivism. Examples of criminogenic needs are: criminal personality; antisocial attitudes, values, and beliefs; low self control; criminal peers; substance abuse; and dysfunctional family. Based on an assessment of the offender, these criminogenic needs can be prioritized so that services are focused on the greatest criminogenic needs.

Eight Principles for Evidence-Based Practice (EBP) in Community Corrections (con't.)

c) Responsivity Principle

Responsivity requires that we consider individual characteristics when matching offenders to services. These characteristics include, but are not limited to: culture, gender, motivational stages, developmental stages, and learning styles. These factors influence an offender's responsiveness to different types of treatment.

The principle of responsivity also requires that offenders be provided with treatment that is proven effective with the offender population. Certain treatment strategies, such as cognitive-behavioral methodologies, have consistently produced reductions in recidivism with offenders under rigorous research conditions.

Providing appropriate responsivity to offenders involves selecting services in accordance with these factors, including:

a) Matching treatment type to offender; and

b) Matching style and methods of communication with offender's stage of change readiness.

d) Dosage

Providing appropriate doses of services, pro-social structure, and supervision is a strategic application of resources. Higher risk offenders require significantly more initial structure and services than lower risk offenders. During the initial three to nine months post-release, 40%-70% of their free time should be clearly occupied with delineated routine and appropriate services, (e.g., outpatient treatment, employment assistance, education, etc.) Certain offender subpopulations (e.g., severely mentally ill, chronic dual diagnosed, etc.) commonly require strategic, extensive, and extended services. However, too often individuals within these subpopulations are neither explicitly identified nor provided a coordinated package of supervision/services.

The evidence indicates that incomplete or uncoordinated approaches can have negative effects, often wasting resources.

(Palmer, 1995; Gendreau & Goggin, 1995; Steadman, 1995; Silverman, et al, 2000)

e) Treatment Principle

Treatment, particularly cognitive-behavioral types, should be applied as an integral part of the sentence/sanction process.

Integrate treatment into sentence/sanction requirements through assertive case management (taking a proactive and strategic approach to supervision and case planning). Delivering targeted and timely treatment interventions will provide the greatest long-term benefit to the community, the victim, and the offender. This does not necessarily apply to lower risk offenders, who should be diverted from the criminal justice and corrections systems whenever possible.

Questions to Ask:

- How do we manage offenders assessed as low risk to reoffend?
- Does our assessment tool assess for criminogenic need?
- How are criminogenic risk and need information incorporated into offender case plans?
- How are offenders matched to treatment resources?
- How structured are our caseplans for offenders, especially during the three to nine month period in the community after leaving an institution?
- How are staff held accountable for using assessment information to develop a case plan and then subsequently using that caseplan to manage an offender?

4) Skill Train with Directed Practice (using cognitive-behavioral treatment methods).

Provide evidence-based programming that emphasizes cognitivebehavioral strategies and is delivered by well trained staff. To successfully deliver this treatment to offenders, staff must understand antisocial thinking, social learning, and appropriate communication techniques. Skills are not just taught to the offender, but are practiced or role-played and the resulting pro-social attitudes and behaviors are positively reinforced by staff. Correctional agencies should prioritize, plan, and budget to predominantly implement programs that have been scientifically proven to reduce recidivism.

Ouestions to Ask:

- How are social learning techniques incorporated into the programs we deliver?
- How do we ensure that our contracted service providers are delivering services in alignment with social learning theory?
- Are the programs we deliver and contract for based on scientific evidence of recidivism reduction?

Questions to Ask: Do we model positive reinforcement techniques

Do our staff understand and use the four-to-one theory in their interactions with offenders?

in our day-to-day interactions with our

co-workers?

Increase Positive Reinforcement.

When learning new skills and making behavioral changes, human beings appear to respond better and maintain learned behaviors for longer periods of time, when approached with carrots rather than sticks. Behaviorists recommend applying a much higher ratio of positive reinforcements to negative reinforcements in order to better achieve sustained behavioral change. Research indicates that a ratio of four positive to every one negative reinforcement is optimal for promoting behavior changes. These rewards do not have to be applied consistently to be effective (as negative reinforcement does) but can be applied randomly

Increasing positive reinforcement should not be done at the expense of or undermine administering swift, certain, and real responses for negative and unacceptable behavior. Offenders having problems with responsible self-regulation generally respond positively to reasonable and reliable additional structure and boundaries. Offenders may initially overreact to new demands for accountability, seek to evade detection or consequences, and fail to recognize any personal responsibility. However, with exposure to clear rules that are consistently (and swiftly) enforced with appropriate graduated consequences, offenders and people in general, will tend to comply in the direction of the most rewards and least punishments. This type of extrinsic motivation can often be useful for beginning the process of behavior change.

Engage On-going Support in Natural Communities.

Realign and actively engage pro-social supports for offenders in their communities. Research indicates that many successful interventions with extreme populations (e.g., inner city substance abusers, homeless, dual diagnosed) actively recruit and use family members, spouses, and supportive others in the offender's immediate environment to positively reinforce desired new behaviors. This Community Reinforcement Approach (CRA) has been found effective for a variety of behaviors (e.g., unemployment, alcoholism, substance abuse, and marital conflicts). In addition, relatively recent research now indicates the efficacy of twelve step programs, religious activities, and restorative justice initiatives that are geared towards improving bonds and ties to pro-social community members.

Ouestions to Ask:

- Do we engage community supports for offenders as a regular part of case planning?
- How do we measure our community network contacts as they relate to an offender?

(Azrin, & Besalel, 1980; Emrick et al, 1993; Higgins & Silverman, 1999; Meyers & Smith, 1997; Wallace, 1989; Project MATCH Research Group, 1997; Bonta et al, 2002; O'Connor & Perryclear, 2003; Ricks, 1974; Clear & Sumter, 2003; Meyers et al, 2002)

Eight Principles for Evidence-Based Practice (EBP) in Community Corrections (con't.)

Measure Relevant Processes/Practices.

Accurate and detailed documentation of case information, along with a formal and valid mechanism for measuring outcomes, is the foundation of evidence-based practice. Agencies must routinely assess offender change in cognitive and skill development, and evaluate offender recidivism, if services are to remain effective.

In addition to routinely measuring and documenting offender change,

Ouestions to Ask:

- What data do we collect regarding offender assessment and case management?
- How do we measure incremental offender change while they are staff performance should also be regularly assessed. Staff that are periodically evaluated for performance achieve greater fidelity to program design, service delivery principles, and outcomes. Staff whose performance is not consistently monitored, measured, and subsequently reinforced work less cohesively, more frequently at cross-purposes and provide less support to the agency mission.

under supervision?

- What are our outcome measures and how do we track them?
- How do we measure staff performance? What data do we use? How is that data collected?

8) Provide Measurement Feedback.

Once a method for measuring relevant processes / practices is in place (principle seven), the information must be used to monitor process and change. Providing feedback to offenders regarding their progress builds accountability and is associated with enhanced motivation for change, lower treatment attrition, and improved outcomes (e.g., reduced drink/drug days; treatment engagement; goal achievement).

The same is true within an organization. Monitoring delivery of services and fidelity to procedures helps build accountability and maintain integrity to the agency's mission. Regular performance audits and case reviews with an eye toward improved outcomes, keep staff focused on the ultimate goal of reduced recidivism through the use of evidence-based principles.

Questions to Ask:

- How is information regarding offender change and outcomes shared with officers?
   With offenders?
- With whom do we share information regarding outcome measures?
- How is staff performance data used in the performance evaluation process?

Eight Principles for Evidence-Based Practice (EBP) in Community Corrections (con't.)

Conclusion

Aligning these evidence-based principles with the core components of an agency is a consummate challenge and will largely determine the impact the agency has on sustained reductions in recidivism. In order to accomplish this shift to an outcome orientation, practitioners must be prepared to dedicate themselves to a mission that focuses on achieving sustained reductions in recidivism. The scientific principles presented in this document are unlikely to produce a mandate for redirecting and rebuilding an agency's mission by themselves. Leadership in organizational change and collaboration for systemic change are also necessary.

The framework of principles and the developmental model they comprise can and should be operationalized at three critical levels: 1) the individual case; 2) the agency; and 3) the system. At each of these levels thorough, comprehensive, and strategic planning will be necessary in order to succeed. Identifying, prioritizing, and formulating well-timed plans for addressing such particular issues are tasks requiring system collaboration and a focus on organizational development.

A final caveat here is a caution about implementation; the devil's in the details. Though the track record for program implementation in corrections may not be especially stellar, there is helpful literature regarding implementation principles. Prior to embarking on any implementation or strategic planning project, a succinct review of this literature is recommended (Mihalic & Irwin, 2003; Ellickson et al, 1983; Durlak, 1998; Gendreau et al, 1999; Gottfredson et al, 2000; Henggeler et al, 1997; Harris & Smith, 1996).

FY25 Case Plan Feedback

Agency: 1st JD Leavenworth County Community Corrections

Overall, excellent job at tying together the Agency Plan section of the grant with what you identified in the Agency Case Plan (excel document). You can very easily see the connection between the two which is the desired result.

The agency states their areas of focus with clients will be in the domains of: criminal history, companions, family/marital, attitudes, and drugs/alcohol domains. I would encourage the agency focuses on the "Big 4" domains that research has shown provides the greatest impact at behavior change. Big 4 being, procriminal attitude/orientation, antisocial pattern, companions, and family/marital.

Although research has identified criminal history as one of the eight most influential criminogenic needs, additional research has shown not to focus on criminal history because it is considered a static factor – that is, it cannot be changed. Instead, research supports focusing on dynamic factors – those that are changeable.

Substance misue, employment, and education can influence law violations but not as much as the Big 4. Some of the less influential criminogenic needs are derivatives of the four most influential ones. For example, a poor employment record is often a result of antisocial cognition ("I'm not going to work for minimum wage") or getting fired due to poor anger management or problem-solving skills (antisocial personality/temperament). In such cases, employment issues will not get resolved until the more influential needs are addressed.

Goal #1: I wonder if the third action step should be rewritten to modify the 30-day timeframe as a risk assessment needs to be completed within 45 days. One idea could be, 'upon the risk assessment being completed, staff will have X amount of time to complete the referral, etc.'

Goal #2: Your first few action steps state within 30 days, is this 30 days after the sentencing date/risk assessment completed or within 30 days of starting supervision. More clarification is needed, and in addition be mindful that case plans cannot be completed until a risk assessment is completed. Current KDOC standards require the assessment and case plan to be created within 45 days of sentencing.

Additional action steps may be needed to address introducing this practice with staff, such as explain/remind the reasoning of dosage. How they will track it, if the time management sheet is not created yet, this will be an action step that is needed. I see the last action step listed in the goal could address some of that and if that is the intent, I'd suggest moving it toward the top of the action steps as that would be something to address at the start of this goal.

A bulk of the current goals are reliant on work being done in programming groups. I think it's important for staff to work with clients in addition to referral to programming, focus given to the work that can be done one on one with the client. Staff have many opportunities to reinforce the skills and tools being given in programming and additional exposure for the client to increase said skills are important and also count towards dosage. Is this something that could be explored and monitored as well by creating an additional goal and/or action steps?

Goal #3: Similar to Goal #2, what is the within 30 days from? Clarification is needed.

Goal #5: Perhaps in addition to distributing the updated resource list, that action step could include explanation provided to staff on the purpose and expectations of positive support group and how it will be monitored. Is there a document already created the ISO II will use to track staff compliance with positive support or is that needed? If needed, that can be an added action step.

Leavenworth County Request for Board Action Case No. DEV-25-085/086 Preliminary & Final Plat Maples Meadows

Date: September 24, 2025

To: Board of County Commissioners

From: Planning & Zoning Staff

Department Head Review: John Jacobson, Reviewed

Additional Reviews as needed:

Budget Review ☐ Administrator Review ☐ Legal Review ☐

Action Request:

Chairman, I find that the proposed Final Plat as outlined in case DEV-25-086 is compliant with the County Zoning & Subdivision Regulations and move that the proposed Final Plat be conditionally approved and accepted by this Board subject to the conditions set forth in the staff report and as adopted by the Planning Commission.

Analysis: The applicant is proposing to divide a 29-acre parcel into two (2) lots. The Subdivision is classified as a Class C with all lots lying within the Rural Growth Area of Leavenworth County. Staff is supportive of a waiver of the requirement to connect to a sanitary sewer system as sanitary sewers are not located within 660' of the subdivision (see condition 3). Lot 1, as proposed, is a 23.86-acre lot that does not comply with the Lot-Depth to Lot-Width requirement. Lot 2 is a 5.25-acre lot that is compliant with the zoning and subdivision regulations. During the Preliminary Plat phase, exceptions were granted for:

1. Exception to Article 50, Section 40.3.i. Lot-Depth to Lot-Width

The final plat meets the standards set forth in the Leavenworth County Zoning and Subdivision Regulations with the approved exception.

Recommendation: The Planning Commission voted 8-0 (1 absent) to recommend approval of Case No.DEV-25-086, Final Plat for Maples Meadows, subject to conditions.

Alternatives:

- 1. Approve Case No. DEV-25-086, Final Plat for Maples Meadows, with Findings of Fact, and with or without conditions; or
- 2. Deny Case No. DEV-25-086, Final Plat for Maples Meadows, with Findings of Fact; or
- 3. Revise or Modify the Planning Commission Recommendation to Case No. DEV-25-086, Final Plat for Maples Meadows with Findings of Fact; or
- 4. Remand the case back to the Planning Commission.

STAFF COMMENTS:

The applicant is proposing to divide a 29-acre parcel into two (2) lots. The Subdivision is classified as a Class C with all lots lying within the Rural Growth Area of Leavenworth County. Staff is supportive of a waiver of the requirement to connect to a sanitary sewer system as sanitary sewers are not located within 660' of the subdivision (see condition 3). Lot 1, as proposed, is a 23.86-acre lot that does not comply with the Lot-Depth to Lot-Width requirement. Lot 2 is a 5.25-acre lot that is compliant with the zoning and subdivision regulations.

EXCEPTIONS:

The applicant has requested an exception from Article 50, Section 40.3.i. – Lot-Depth to Lot-Width. The criteria for the acceptance of an exception is as follows:

- 1. That there are special circumstances or conditions affecting the property.
- 2. That the variance or exception is necessary for the reasonable and acceptable development of the property in question.
- 3. That the granting of the variance or exception will not be detrimental to the public welfare or injurious to the adjacent property.

Motion: The Planning Commission hereby (approves/denies) an exception from Article 50, Section 40.3.i. – Lot-Depth to Lot-Width conformance with the Zoning & Subdivision Regulations for the Maples Meadows subdivision, as submitted by the application, based on a finding that all three criteria for an exception has been met.

PROPOSED CONDITIONS:

- 1. Building permits shall be required for any new construction.
- 2. Erosion control shall be used when designing and constructing driveways. A form of sediment control shall be installed before work begins and maintained throughout the time that the land disturbing activities are taking place. Re-vegetation of all disturbed sites shall be completed within 45 days after completion of final grading weather permitting.
- 3. A waiver for the use of private septic systems within this subdivision is granted with this approval.
- 4. At time of development, fire hydrants shall be required, if necessary infrastructure is available. If the infrastructure is not available to support fire hydrants, a letter from the Water District stating such must be provided prior to any building permit being issued.

- 5. An exception from Article 50, Section 40.3.i. Lot-Depth to Lot-Width has been approved for Lot 1.
- 6. The developer must comply with the following memorandums:

Memo - Public Works, dated September 3, 2025

Memo - Survey, dated August 28, 2025

Memo – Planning & Zoning, dated August 29, 2025

AFFIDAVIT

August 1, 2006 Zoning & Subdivision Regulations for Leavenworth County, Kansas

ARTICLE 56 – EXCEPTIONS

Where in the case of a particular proposed subdivision, it can be shown that strict compliance with the requirements of these regulations would result in extraordinary hardship to the subdivider because of unusual topography or other non-self-inflicted conditions; or that these conditions would result in inhibiting the achievement of the objectives of these regulations; the Planning Commission may vary, modify or waive the requirements so that substantial justice may be done and the public interest secured; provided, that such variance, modification or waiver will not have the effect of nullifying the intent and purpose of these regulations or interfering with carrying out the Comprehensive Plan.

In recommending such variance or exception, the Planning Commission shall find the following:

- 1. That there are special circumstances or conditions affecting the property.

  Parent tract is irregular shaped being more narrow at the road frontage
- 2. That the variance or exception is necessary for the reasonable and acceptable development of the property in question.

Yes - allows for a second house on a platted lot

3. That the granting of the variance or exception will not be detrimental to the public welfare or injurious to adjacent property.
